That Old Cow.

Speaking of summer research works one might easily put in a couple months studying the old cow. true you wouldn't know any more about the sly old creature at the end than you did at the beginning. But isn't that exactly what you want as a subject for you may dive to deeps below deeps with-out ever getting your feet on the firm ground at the bottom?

It seems to make no difference whether you have neighbored with cows all our life or whether you have never before met one in pasture society. Every cow is an entirely new and unknown quantity. Any one of them will delude and outwit you in ways you never

Part of the secret of this is that a cow can look so innocent and meek. It is an established fact—though not everybody knows it yet—that if you can look meek when you are not you can inherit the earth without turning your hand over. So with the old cow, it is her first step to gaze at you with a mild and friendly eye as if there were no guile in her. She responds amiably to pats on the nose and tries to make herself agreeable by tagging you around the pasture and while you are berrying. You think she at 135 days.

The Columbia sheep is a new dualpurpose type of sheep developed by the Department of Agriculture to meet the lemand of western sheepmen for range onditions—a type that would best enable them to profit by the attractive prices paid for lambs, since mutton has attained its permanent place in the American diet, and still maintain their former ousiness of growing wool. For many years range men had been attempting to cross the coarse-wool with the fine-wool breeds to improve the fleece, and the result was that no definite type was established and that there was a great variance in the product from the various crosses. The work of producing this special type has been going on since 1912, when the Department started it near Laramie, Wyo.

The Columbia is the result of an orig

"It isn't only in our climate that spices are useful—they stir up lazy livers in the tropics, and frighten away scurvy in the Arctic regions. It has been said to be the largest pair ever seen on these grounds. They girth 8 feet 5 and 8 feet 6 respectively, and the trailing have really the most balthat Italians have really the most bal-anced diet of all nations. And wherever another south they insist on the pounds without yoke. They are mottled they go—north or south, they insist on their same highly seasoned sauce for their spaghetti, their salad with peppers, their fowl with stuffing peppery and flavorful. They show sense, too, just as the Indian cook does when he prepares a dish of rice with curry. Starch needs an engine behind it—a charge of giantpowder. The Mexican, too, when he stokes up on beans, adds a match of pep-

After all, the Five O'clocks decided, life would be a dull and dreary thing without spices, and they did not intend to omit them from their stores in the future.
